

Encapsulate your words!

The Cap Art Vending Machine is an alternative distribution network. Inside a given capsule, you may find a tiny chapbook, a poem, or an art project produced by a Capilano student or alumni, faculty member, visiting writer, or artist. For one nickel, these tiny art- and word-bearing capsules are dispensed from a refurbished clown's head vending machine housed in Capilano College's Writing Centre (FIR 402).

Your participation in this art/word distribution network:

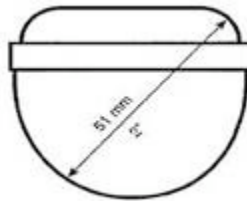

- provides a local and immediate audience for your creative projects
- sustains the creative community at Capilano
- is just plain funky.

Guidelines for Artists & Writers

The Cap-Art vending project is ongoing, and we are always interested in new works. We respect artistic freedom and are open to both emerging and established writers and artists. The Cap-Art vending machine is part of and respects a diverse community and so, no racist, homophobic, or sexist works will be accepted. Otherwise, your imagination and our capsules are the limit!

Want to submit? Here's how:

- 1) Get an idea of what kinds of projects already exist in the vending machine (i.e. drop by and invest a nickel!)
- 2) Create a prototype that will fit in our capsule (again, a one-nickel investment might come in handy!) Your project should be no more than 50 grams in weight, and must fit comfortably inside the 2" diameter capsule. Please don't submit perishables, magnets, or hazardous materials.

- 3) Drop off between ten and twenty-five capsule-ready copies of your artistic text- or art-based project in the English Department. (The English Department will provide the capsules and let you know when they're loaded).
- 4) Be sure to fill out the form on the back of this page in order to provide us with details about you and your work (for our archives).
- 5) You might want to include your name and email address somewhere on the project itself – so interested parties can contact you about your work.

We hope to encapsulate your work soon!
